Van Gogh Exhibition featuring Pokémon Exhibition

One of the employees is accused of embezzling a box of specially produced Pokémon cards, according to local media reports. At least four members of staff have been let go from the Van Gogh Museum in Amsterdam for alleged misconduct during the institutions wildly popular Pokémon exhibition. Security guards and front of house employees allegedly provided potential visitors with insider information on how to get limited tickets to the show, which featured six small paintings featuring Pokémon characters inspired by Van Gogh. Another employee allegedly embezzled a box of Pokémon cards that had been produced by the exhibition.

'The Illustrated Story of Art'

By DK

With 400 pages of information about how art has evolved since the age of cave painting, this is a solid hardback. Lavishly illustrated and packed with 2500 examples of stunning paintings and sculptures, every major artistic movement is described in absorbing detail.

Banksy's Shredded Girl with a Balloon, renamed and redated again

It's the work of art that keeps on giving. Banksy's Girl with Balloon which was renamed Love is in the Bin by the artists studio Pest Control after it was shredded during a live auction at Sotheby's in 2018, has quietly been renamed and given a new date for the second time. The new piece started in 2021, which is when the old piece was destroyed. So we can assume that Banksy wanted to change the name because the piece is a new painting clarifying with the art newspaper, he notes that any destruction of the work was symbolic. There was physically only one work, but the change in title implies that the work changed status in the mind of the artist.
